NAVAL AND MILITARY CHRONICLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

ESTIMATE OF BRITISH TROOPS IN UPPER CANADA.

Notwithstanding the pomp and preparation of the wars, and the eclat of many of the battles, of Europe, we have always believed, and oftentimes asserted, that, for the number of men engaged in the service, the late contest between Great Britain and the United States was more active, vigorous, and sanguinary, and more strongly marked by deeds of heroic courage and desperate daring, than any other that has occurred in modern times. It was characterized, particularly on the part of the Americans, by much of the chivalric spirit of former ages, accompanied by an unusual degree of skill in the instruments and means of human slaughter.

The following statement, founded, as we believe, on authentic documents, taken in connexion with others that have heretofore appeared in this journal, furnishes ample testimony of the truth of these remarks in relation to that postion of the war which deluged in blood the Niagara frontier, in the summer of 1814. The campaign lasted but little more than two months, commencing on the night of the second of July, with the crossing of the Niagara river by the American forces, and terminating on the seventeenth of September, by their glorious sortic from the lines of fort Erie. During by far the greater part of this time, so active were the operations, that the sword and the bayonet but seldom found a day's repose in the scabbard, and the rifle, the musket and the cannon were in hourly use. Corresponding to this constancy of combat was the carnage which ensued. On this point we assert nothing positively, but express, without hesitation, our firm belief, that the annals of modern warfare will be examined in vain for an equal destruction of officers and soldiers, under similar circumstances, in so short a time, and in an army of such limited numbers.

Of the exact force of the command which general Brown led into Canada, we have no intelligence that can be deemed official. From information, however, which we believe to be correct, we venture to say, that it amounted to less than three thousand regulars, in two brigades, under the command of Scott and Ripley, and a few hundred militia, commanded by general Porter. Numerically speaking, it was certainly much inferior to the force of the enemy; and yet, in four general and desperate engagements, it was four times successively victorious. So dexterous and deadly was it in the use of its arms, that, on each occasion, the havoc it made among the foe was altogether unprecedented. Including the fall of their Indians and militia, there can be no doubt that the loss of the British was, in comparison with that sustained by the Americans, at least in the proportion of two to one. In fact, to every enlightened and candid observe, of the progress of the war it must appear, we think, incontrovertibly obvious, that the army of the United States was rapidly acquiring over the enemy, the same ascendency which, in every instance of conflict, marked the achievements of our gallant navy.- Editor.

The 15th August, in attempting to carry that place by assault, he lost not less than twelve hundred men. In this statement it is to be understood always, that no account is taken of militia or Indians in the British service.

• From another document in our possession, entitled to no small degree of credit, the loss of the enemy, including that of Indians and militia, is stated at five thousand—Nor are we inclined to believe that the estimate is much exaggerated.

Extracts from the Adjutant-General's Office, showing the loss sustained by the Left Division of the United States' Army, commanded by Maj. Gen-Jacob Brown, from the 2d day of July, 1814, (the opening of the campaign on the Nisgara frontier,) to the 17th of September, the day of the sortie from Fort Eric, Upper Canada, which terminated the siege of the American army.

Nork—The siege lasted 46 days, from August 2d to the 17th September—the enemy's batteries, however, did not open upon our camp until the morning of the 13th, and but little execution was done after the 6th of September.
